

When I think of immigration these are the pictures that come to mind. The first picture shows what the citizens have to do to get their visa or green card to be allowed into the United States. These papers are sometimes easy to get but often hard because of how long you have to wait to get one. The only way into the states is from these papers or being born in the U.S. the second picture shows the different cultures that are in the United States. People from all over the world immigrate to the United States in search for a new and prosperous life. Picture also shows how diverse the communities are throughout the states. Finally the last picture pretty much shows the same as the second picture. It shows how everyone from different countries coming together to build a great society. I believe that if we still have hatred between cultures we won't move forward in society, so it's our job as the next generation to fix that.
